WILL WATCH HUBBY

MRS. BUNCHEAU SCADS HAS HER DOUBTS.

She Relates Some of the Happenings Incidental to Their "Butting In" to High-Class Social Functions.

"Me and Bunch had an invite to a bridge party at the Pomeroy Maltine Burgundays last night, and though I don't care much for them funerals, Bunch was so set on going that we went—an 'me' without the least idea what a bridge party might be like; whether a fishin' picnic or some new kind of a straw ride.

"But, say, them Burgundays has sure got a swell mansion. Must be anyway all o' 30 rooms, all lit by electricity and bet by steam, and furniture an' statues an' pictures till you can't rest.

"First thing when you go in th' front door you see a marble statue of a young woman, with 'nothin' particular on, and one arm broke above th' elbow.

"An' I told Bunch then and there I thought it plum disgraceful to have statues of young wimmen standing 'round 'bout no raiment, though it was a sin an' shame that th' hired girl had been so careless 'bout breakin' off th' arm.

"Bunch, who's been studyin' all about art since he's tried to butt into society, whispered that th' arm hadn't ben broke by no hired girl, but that the statue was a replica—think he said—of one made by some famous old fellow, and th' arm was broke—likely ben' hit by a spade when they dug her up hundreds o' years ago. Said she was the Shef Doover of this old statue-maker. (Bunch's also been readin' a French dictionary, and I s'pose Shef Doover means somethin' he didn't want to say right out, 'cause you can't never tell what them French'll do.)

"They was a picture of another lady entitled 'Return of Spring,' but it looked 't me more like midsummer, for she didn't have a stitch more on her than th' Shef Dooverin' woman did.

"Positively they ain't a thing to this high-falutin' society for me, but I've just made up my mind that Bunch don't go to none o' these doin's 'bout me bel's along.

"He's pretty wise as a money getter, but I noticed las' night a woman who, for goodness' sake, was old enough to know better, sort o' gooooin' at him.

"An' you can't never tell; mebbe she might be one o' them Shef Doovers."

One Belted Earl.

The Earl of Leicester, who died recently, was known as the "first farmer of England." On the great estates which he inherited from his father were first introduced methods of scientific farming that have greatly benefited English agriculture. They include the four-course rotation in crops—turnips, barley, clover, wheat—and the live stock shows. The earl was interesting not only as a farmer, but as an example of longevity in a long-lived family. No less than 157 years separated the birth of the father and the death of the son, and the son married his second wife 100 years after the father married his first. The father of the earl, who has just died, headed a deputation from Norfolk to urge George III to acknowledge the independence of the American colonies. He died at the age of 95, the son at the age of 87.—Youth's Companion.

"Inauguration" of Henry V.
The terrific blizzard which marred President Taft's inauguration has a parallel in English history in the stormy weather experienced at the coronation of Henry V. in 1413. Hollis, most accurate of chroniclers, informs us: "He was crowned the ninth day of April, being Passion Sunday, which was a sore ruggle and tempestuous day, with wind, snow and sleet that men greatly marveled thereat, making diverse interpretation what the same might signify." Hardyng also mentions this tempest in his quaint rhyming chronicle:

On Passyon Sundaye after was this King
Anoynted and crowned without tary eng,
The ninth daye it was of April so
With stormes fell and haylstones grete also.

Takes Pessimistic View.

Dr. J. L. Elliott, associate leader of the Ethical Culture society, is reported to have said recently that "we are getting tired of education as displayed to us by the Yale and Harvard man, Vassar and Bryn Mawr girl. They grate on our nerves and we are beginning to think that it is money not well spent to send our children through college." With the exception of lawyers and doctors they turn out he seemed to think the college of little benefit to the man or woman in the process.

Didn't Mean It.

"A man told me yesterday that he thought you one of the smartest chaps he ever saw, but he held his hat before his face when he said it."
"What did he do that for?"
"To show me that he was talking through his hat, I guess."

Her Dear Friend.

Nan was sitting for her photograph. "What is that strange noise I hear?" she asked.
"I think it's the camera, trying to sound the 'C. Q. D.' alarm," said Fan.

IN DEFENSE OF THE SWAMP.

Southern Writer Sees Little Harm in Them, But Public Opinion is Against Him.

Out of Georgia comes defense and even praise of the swamps. Dr. Roland Harper, in a publication of the Georgia Forest association, declares that swamps are not so black nor so noxious as they are painted, the Washington Post says. He even predicts a time when swamps will be reserved as parks for the preservation of their scenic beauties, which are not yet appreciated by nature lovers. An additional reason for preservation of the swamps he finds in the great need of forestation for the protection of the sources of streams, an argument in which there is considerable merit, although most of the great swamps are found not at the sources of streams, but near the mouths of rivers.

From time immemorial swamps have been identified with malaria and other fevers and diseases. Dr. Harper thinks they have been much maligned in this respect, declaring that there can be no objection to swamps on hygienic grounds since the discovery that malaria is spread only by the agency of mosquitoes. But right here the doctor overlooks the most potent argument for the draining of the swamps, for it is only by drainage that the great breeding haunts of the mosquitoes and other disease-bearing insects can be rendered innocuous. The existence of a large swamp near any center of population is a grave menace to health and inevitably reduces the economic, industrial and social efficiency of the people in the vicinity. As the south is to-day the greatest sufferer from the blighting effects of malaria and the diseases that follow in its train, it is somewhat remarkable that a defense of these pest spots should come from the pen of an intelligent, observing southerner.

It is a matter of history that can be verified by reference to any standard textbook that malarial diseases have disappeared from Europe and the northern part of the United States in almost exact proportion to the draining of the swamps. It is a necessary step in civilization's battle with disease. The widespread aversion to and dread of swamps that refuses to recognize their aesthetic values, which Dr. Harper deplores, is a deep-seated, popular instinct founded upon centuries of bitter warfare with swamp-bred disease.

Good Quality for Statesman.

It is said of George B. Cortelyou that he would stand on the rear of President McKinley's train when the president was touring the country and not only recognize the men of the town who had during his time come to Washington, but recall their names as well.

One time, it is said, the train stopped at a small station in the west. Cortelyou with the other members of the president's party alighted for a few minutes to limber up. A man came up to him and proceeded to introduce himself. Cortelyou interrupted him.

"I am glad to meet you, Mr. Jones. That matter about the claim is in the hands of the treasury department now, and you may expect to hear from it almost any time."

The man had not seen Cortelyou in eight months, and then for exactly five minutes.

Autos with Dog Kennels.

The dog trotting contentedly along between or just back of the rear wheels of a carriage is one of the pleasant remembrances of the time when the horse was supreme, but horse and dog were both rudely disturbed by the advent of the automobile.

Automobiles run too fast for a dog to trot along beside, and as there is not room within the automobile for anything larger than a lap dog the coach dog had to go.

One English automobile firm is now manufacturing an automobile body that opens at the back, disclosing a roomy kennel for dogs, but it is probable that although better than nothing at all this arrangement will not be completely satisfactory to either dog or masters.—Popular Mechanics.

Silencers Have Found Favor.

Hiram Percy Maxim, Jr., the inventor, says that the United States government has made its first large purchase of the Maxim gun silencers, probably for use in the musketry schools and for testing by federal sharpshooters, who will suggest possible improvements. Spain, France and larger European powers have bought silencers through Mr. Maxim's representative, Hart O. Berg, who is also business manager of the Wright brothers. King Alfonso of Spain has had his own Mauser fitted with a silencer since he witnessed a demonstration in France recently.

One-Finger Exercises.

The piano below sounded insistently upon one note, being tuned. It had gone on for an hour or more.

"Doesn't that annoy you?" asked her visitor.

"Not half so much," said she, "as the playing by the flat dweller down there. She plays one note, too, but it's always the wrong one."

Natural.

"She's a very natural girl."
"So?"
"Yes; whenever she's invited out to dine she never thinks of taking the smallest piece of meat in sight, but helps herself to as much as she would eat if she were at home."—Detroit Free Press.

The Proposed Railroad.

The citizens in the mass meeting Monday night empowered the chairman, E. M. Taubman, to appoint a committee of thirteen to handle the proposition of Capt. Belt for an electric line between Lexington and Odessa. This is an important and practicable project to Lexington and every living soul within her corporate limits should feel the necessity of contributing towards its consummation. The task that awaits this committee is not going to be an easy one. It means a sacrifice of time and money to them, and everyone, rich or poor, should put his shoulders to the wheel and push.
